LETTERS: I have a short wishlist for the coming 15th General Election (GE15) and from the incoming government.

Like everybody else, I hope that the next government is one that is stable and will not change at the drop of a hat, which will spook investors and the markets alike.

Apart from that, whichever party or parties that forms the next government, they should not treat ministerial positions and ministries as a form of reward for support. Please choose individuals who can do justice to whatever portfolio they are assigned to.

They should be a group that Malaysians can rally behind and be exceptional role models to present and future generations. Individuals who can command global respect.

for many years to come, who are and will be the authority for their respective portfolios.

I also want to see an education minister who can initiate game changers that will put our education institutions on the map.

I want ministers that can inspire research and development and build a culture of innovation that etches the blueprint which will launch us into the highest stratosphere of achievement.

Next, I want to see individuals who place the people and the nation at the forefront and can withstand the temptations from the trappings of power and office.

I don't know if this is too much to ask or if it is wishful thinking, but I still believe in us and in Malaysia. Within us, I'm confident in saying that there are still great individuals and individuals that care in this country.

Lastly, all the very best to the parties and candidates in the crowded contest for GE15.
